Jewish Dietary Laws (Kashrut): How to Keep a Kosher Kitchen

To maintain a kosher kitchen, the first and most important element is to only allow certified kosher food into your house. Beyond that, however, the entire kitchen, eating areas and dishes and utensils must also be kosher. The following guidelines for keeping a kosher kitchen are derived from the Conservative perspective; for more practical or personal advice, please consult a halachic authority.

- Dishes & Silverware
- Cabinets, Drawers & Trays
- Tablecloths, Napkins & Placemats
- Refrigerators
- Ovens
- Stovetops
- Microwaves
- Porcelain & Metal Sinks
- Dishwashers

Dishes and silverware

It is essential to have seperate sets of dishes for dairy products and meat. It is best to have two distinct colors, patterns or styles so that you will not be confused when you look at a plate or a fork as to whether it is for dairy or meat.

Cabinets, Drawers & Trays

To help avoid confusion, it is best to designate separate cabinets for the dairy equipment and meat equipment. If you have cabinets on two sides of the kitchen, you may want to put the meat on one side and the dairy one on the other to avoid confusion. When you first organize your kosher kitchen, it is wise to label the cabinets on the outside as "Dairy [Chalav]" and "Meat [Basar]." You can use masking tape or colored file dots that you can get from a stationary store (red and blue are popular to be used, red for meat, blue for dairy). Many Judaica stores and online Judaica shops also sell various styles of labels for meat and dairy. You will also find these labels come in handy if you have guests and they want to put the dishes away or take them out. If you have a housekeeper, labeling helps make sure no mistakes are made.

Tableclothes, Napkins & Placemats

As with the kitchen, the dining room/eating area maintains the separation of meat and dairy foods by using separate utensils. This includes separate tablecloths, (cloth) napkins, placemats and other similar items.

While laundering may be suitable to kasher them (particularly if mistakes are made), it is advisable to have a seperate meat and dairy set because you may forget before using them which type of food was eaten on them last.

Refrigerators

When placing food in the refrigerator, care should be taken to avoid contact between open packages of meat and dairy products.

Ovens

One should not use the oven for dairy and meat at the same time. Between using the oven for dairy and meat, the oven should be cleaned (wiped up) if spillage has occured. Electronic self-cleaning ovens can be kashered simply by cleaning up spills and running the self-cleaning cycle, however, oven manufacturers generally recommend that the self-cleaning cycle not be used more than once or twice a year due to the extremely high heat that the self-cleaning cycle generates.

Stovetops

Spills on the stovetops should be cleaned, particularly in between using the stove for meat and dairy foods. This is especially true if you tend to rest pot lids on the stovetop when cooking. There is no need to designate seperate meat and dairy burners. It is best to avoid cooking meat and dairy foods on the same stovetop at the same time to avoid spillage. If you must do so, extra care should be taken to ensure that no spillage or transfer or liquid or heat occurs and to ensure that your pots are covered tightly.

Microwaves

It is best not to use a microwave oven for cooking meat and dairy foods at the same time because microwave covers usually have holes in them that allow fumes to escape.

Porcelain & Metal Sinks

Because porcelain sinks are made of material that is not kasher-able, sink racks (that fit on the bottom of the sink and keep the dishes from touching the bottom) or a tub (which can be used for soaking the dishes) are put into the sink. Separate racks or tubs must be used for dairy and meat.

Metal sinks may be kashered by pouring boiling water in them. The water must be boiling before you pour the water in and remain boiling as it comes into contact with the metal lining of the sink. There should be a separation (such as racks or tubs) between meat and dairy dishes.

Dishwashers

There is a difference of opinion as to how to use dishwashers:

- Most Orthodox authorities hold that you can not use the same dishwasher for meat and dairy utensils, even if they are washed at different times.
- 2. Some liberal authorities hold that one may use the same dishwasher (provided its interior is stainless steel) for meat and dairy utensils provided that they are washed at different times and an empty full cycle, only with dishwashing soap, (using the hottest water that your dishwasher provides) must be run in between meat and dairy. Some hold that the dishwasher must be left unused for 24 hours before running this cycle.
- 3. Some authorities require that the (stainless steel) dishwasher be given a thorough cleaning (including the strainer) and that separate racks must be used between meat and dairy cycles. This is the opinion of Rav Moshe Feinstein zt"l.
- 4. Meat and dairy utensils can never be washed in the same dishwasher at the same time.

How to Prepare Kosher Food

Chances are you've often seen food packages that claim to be kosher. This may have led you to wonder how kosher food is prepared. Obviously, there has to be certain guidelines. There has to be more to it than just avoiding pork products. Preparing kosher food involves certain steps that are taken directly from the Torah. The following steps will help you better understand Jewish culture and how to prepare kosher food.

Choose kosher meat products. Pork isn't the only type of meat that is prohibited. In fact, many Jewish butchers sell only the front part of animals because the back half contains the sciatic nerve and adjoining blood vessels, which may not be eaten. While this nerve and the blood vessels can be removed, the labor is so time-consuming that butchers choose not to do so. According to kosher laws, animals that have cloven hooves or chew their own cud are considered kosher. Kosher law also allows certain fish and poultry to be eaten, but shellfish are not allowed.

Drain or broil blood from meat. Before kosher meat products can be consumed, they must first be drained of their blood. The blood can also be removed through broiling or soaking and salting the meat. This process is usually taken care of by kosher butchers, but if a kosher butcher is unavailable, this step will be left up to you.

Prepare the meat using kosher ingredients. Meat products cannot be prepared with dairy. For example, cheeseburgers are not kosher. Instead, meat products should be prepared with produce or grains. It's important to note that meat can also be prepared with fish and eggs. If you prefer to have dairy, these ingredients can also be prepared with dairy. The important thing to remember is to not mix dairy and meat.

Use separate utensils and cookware for meat and dairy recipes, When preparing kosher food, you will have a set of utensils and cookware for dairy and one for meat. The items used to prepare either type of food must not come in contact with the other type, For example, you cannot cook a steak in a skillet you used to make a cream-based sauce.

Serve meat and poultry with grains and vegetables, but never dairy. Not only is it against kosher law to prepare meat products with dairy, but you should also avoid serving them

All fruits are kosher foods. Bugs and worms that can contaminate these fruits are not kosher, so care must be taken to rid any fruit of these pests by washing the fruits well. Raspberries, blackberries and strawberries can be a problem because tiny insects can hide in these berries. Soak strawberries in a water bath or cleaning solution, agitate the water to loosen insects, rinse and cut off the tops. Blackberries and raspberries require a different method. You should remove three of the berries, blow on the berry to see if any insects crawl out, and, if not, then you can eat the berries. If you do see an insect, all of the berries must be checked.
